

Urban Omnibus is seeking interns

The Urban Omnibus team is seeking applicants for a winter/spring internship. Interns work closely with Omnibus staff in a collaborative work environment and perform a wide variety of tasks. Candidates should have an interest in design, architecture, and urbanism, and must have strong communication, organization, and writing skills.

Responsibilities include:

- Preparing material for online publication, including writing, layout, editing and fact checking.
- Researching future features and events; staying on top of news feeds and incoming story ideas.
- Assisting with administrative tasks such as the Omnibus weekly email and database updates.
- Coordinating outreach and audience-building efforts.

Opportunities will exist for the intern to develop his/her own feature in collaboration with editors. Strength in graphic design, mapping, Flash, ActionScripting, Java, or a familiarity with and ability to execute interactive online features a strong plus.

Working for Urban Omnibus is a great opportunity to acquire wide-ranging experience in journalism, new media, audio/video production, architecture and urbanism as well as exposure to curatorial, editorial and non-profit management.

This is an unpaid internship, though we are open to discussing independent study or credit opportunities. Hours are flexible, though regularity in schedule is preferred.

Email resume and cover letter to info@urbanomnibus.net.

Urban Omnibus is a project of the Architectural League that explores, through multimedia features and online commentary, the relationship between design of all disciplines and the built environment of New York. The point is to bring together and connect conversations that are otherwise segregated into the various silos of interest within and surrounding design and urbanism. Our goal is to increase understanding of the city we have and encourage ideas that can lead to a more inclusive, more sustainable, more beautiful city that could be. We post a new feature weekly, with posts to our forum throughout the week.
